"All children are entitled to a carefree childhood"

Help with divorce issues

Divorce rates keep increasing. A (challenging) divorce does not only affect parents, it also affects children. When moving from a familiar situation to a new one, uncertainty is inevitable.

Children who have experienced parental divorce are more likely to develop psychosocial problems as well as problems at school. Furthermore, they often show signs of loyalty issues towards their parents. Unfortunately these consequences last well into adulthood. Therefore, we do not only offer support in difficult circumstances, but in the early stages of the divorce process as well.

Not all children have a carefree childhood. Their parents get divorced and fail to resolve their problems. Ongoing conflict between parents will badly affect child development. We're here to help parents create a parenting plan and successfully complete the divorce. We particularly focus on the difficulties children have to deal with after their parents separate and help both parents support their children as best they can.
